ATLAS, INDEX, LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

This volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica contains:

A complete Atlas of the World;

An Index to the preceding twenty-three volumes and to the maps in this volume;

A list of contributors to this Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, together with the articles contributed by them.

I. ATLAS

IN THIS EDITION of the Encyclopædia Britannica all the political and geographical maps of the different continents, countries, States, provinces, etc., of the world are brought together in this volume instead of being scattered through the separate volumes. This is an innovation in this Edition and indeed as regards encyclopaedias generally, but one that will, we believe, appeal to all users of the volumes. Probably the chief use of maps is to show the position of a State or city or some geographical feature; and it is certainly to the great advantage of the inquirer to have all maps brought together in the volume with the Index, where all names are arranged alphabetically. Moreover, the reader of an article on any one country, say the United States, may wish to have the map of that country open before him as much when he reads page 100 as when he reads page 1.

In addition to the political and geographical maps in the volume covering each continent, country and important State or province, such as have appeared in earlier editions of the Encyclopædia Britannica, there are others which show in colours the physical features, as the height of the land, the depth of the seas. The map of South America, for example, pages 190 and 191, will give the reader a graphic representation of the physical features of that continent; Switzerland, page 186, will show the traveller the dominant characteristics which make that country so interesting. A number of other physical maps of equal interest will be noted.

In addition to the political and physical maps included in this volume, there are many historical maps, as those of Ancient Greece and Rome, charts of the campaigns of Napoleon, the American Civil War, the World War, and diagrams of individual battles scattered through the preceding volumes. These naturally accompany the articles they illustrate.

The maps have been especially prepared, engraved and printed for this Edition by John Bartholomew and Sons Ltd. of Edinburgh and display the beauty, accuracy and good judgment that have made the name of Bartholomew so favourably known everywhere. Needless to say, the maps are up-to-date in every respect and form a complete Atlas of the world. The names on all the maps are included in the Index, and the latter therefore supplies a complete gazetteer of the whole world.

II. THE INDEX

Following the Atlas is the Index. A full account of how it was made, and the purposes it fills, will be found in the pages preceding the Index itself. Nothing further need be said here except that the total number of references reaches almost half a million and renders instantly available all the information in the preceding twenty-three volumes of text, the maps and all the illustrations.

III. LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

At the end of this volume is given a complete alphabetical list of the contributors of all signed articles in the 14th Edition, together with the initials that identify each writer. It includes also the headings of the principal articles written by the different contributors. This list supplements the special lists prefaced to the several volumes where biographical information about the contributors is given.

The list speaks for itself and for the work to which the writers have contributed. It contains over 3,000 names of scholars, experts and men of affairs from all countries of the world, each an authority in his field. It is confidently believed that no other single work has ever appeared with a list of equal weight and distinction.

INDEX

How It Was Made and Why It Should Be Used

EVERY important article in the preceding twenty-three volumes of the Encyclopædia Britannica contains information not only on the main subject there treated, but on many related subjects, these often running into the hundreds. Thus, the article on "France" is not merely a comprehensive account of that country, its history, physical features and statistics; it likewise gives information of its kings, statesmen, wars, railways, peoples, departments, industries and scores of other matters relating to France. Again the article on "Napoleon" necessarily tells of the man, but it must also, in the nature of things, include much information on the Island of Corsica where he was born, on the campaigns he fought, the laws he enacted, the men and women he influenced or who influenced him, and so on to the Island of St. Helena where he died. The first and primary purpose of this Index is to render instantly available, by exact reference to volume, page and section of page, all the information in every article in the preceding twenty-three volumes.

The Index serves also another purpose only less important. It solves any problem as to where to look for a given subject or piece of information; thus, there might be some doubt as to where to look for "Intelligence in Animals," or "Laws of War." The Index immediately settles the question. In this edition the number of article headings has been much increased, but there is a limit beyond which the mere multiplying of headings causes needless repetition and the sacrifice of space that can be devoted to additional knowledge.

All the names shown on the maps in this volume (one hundred thousand in number) are also given in the Index in their proper alphabetical position, so that the Index is also a gazetteer of the world.

The present Index, with its hundreds of thousands of entries, unifies the whole work, tells at once where each piece of information is to be found, prevents unnecessary repetition, and allows a large increase in the total information in the volumes.

The 14th Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica consists of twenty-four volumes, but this gives no adequate idea of how large a work it actually is. When, however, one examines a Britannica volume, he finds that each consists of 1,000 pages and that each page contains on an average approximately, 1,450 words, a total for the 24 volumes of 35,000,000 words, or the equivalent of 500 volumes of ordinary size and thickness. If one would realize the usefulness and importance of this Index to the 14th Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, he has but to picture how absurd would be a series of 500 volumes without an Index, and conversely, how necessary an Index under such conditions must be.

Few encyclopaedias have indexes and none on the scale of the Encyclopædia Britannica. The reason for this is, doubtless, because the cost of preparation is so large; but the usefulness of an Index is so evident, and it adds so greatly to the value of the work as a whole, that the publishers of this work have felt that, no matter what the cost, it should be prepared. They earnestly advise every owner to make frequent use of it; it will repay a hundredfold the time spent in consulting it.

The aim of the Index, as has been said, is to refer to the facts distributed under the large number of articles, and therefore to render available all the information in the articles and illustrations. The success attained in this distribution may be estimated from the fact that the references in this volume total almost 500,000. The rule followed by the indexers was to make reference cards only in cases where some substantial information is given. Each reference, therefore, refers to one or more essential facts and in essence is, as it were, an encyclopaedic article; it might well be claimed that 500,000 is the approximate number of articles in the 14th Edition. The total number of references the Index might contain would very greatly exceed half a million were it not for the rule followed by the indexers that information in subordinate articles was not to be indexed if covered in a main article. In other words, only necessary references are given.

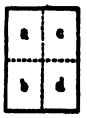
The reader is referred to the rules and abbreviations given on the succeeding pages. We may here state, however, that the headings in the Index are given in two styles of type—bold-face and light-face. The use of bold-face indicates an article in the Encyclopædia Britannica; light-face, information contained in an article or on an illustration or map. The first reference after the heading, if in a square bracket, is always to the atlas maps, that is, to the maps shown in volume 24. Of these there may be one or more according as the reader may find useful information on one or more of the maps. The references that follow the square brackets are to the twenty-three volumes preceding this one. The first reference is always to the article, if there is one of the same title as the Index entry. After that follow others to other articles, arranged alphabetically or according to their importance. References to towns are followed by an abbreviation including the country or State, and often the county, in which they are situated, while physical features such as lakes, rivers, mountains are identified as such. To render the Index still more useful, persons are identified (by abbreviations in parentheses) as to their nationality or profession; similarly, things of the same name are followed by a descriptive word or abbreviation in parentheses.

All illustrations, whether half-tone or colour plates or in the text, are indexed, so that all of this information also is available for the reader. If the reference is to a text illustration, the reference shows its position on the page. If to a full plate it gives the article which the illustration accompanies and the particular figure referred to.

In the case of important articles, as for example, "France," where there are scores, often hundreds of references, the references are grouped together for the convenience of the user under different sub-titles, as Agriculture, Army, Commerce and Industry, Finance, History, etc. These subheadings are arranged alphabetically, as indeed are all references under each subheading, so that the reader will find almost instantly the references for which he is looking.

In this connection the reader is reminded of the fact that in the body of the Encyclopædia itself in their alphabetical places are many headings under which are given a list of the more important articles relating to that subject. Thus, the reader will find in the proper places articles entitled Agricultural Articles, Architectural Articles, Insurance Articles, etc. If he desires to continue the subject he will find under the headings there mentioned additional references, so that if he wishes to pursue a course of reading he will be carried along logically from one subject to another.



Throughout the 14th Edition the reader will find also an unusually large number of cross references. These also are of great assistance since the reader might look for information under a different heading from that preferred by the Editors.

The reader will also notice that at the outside top column of each page of the Index are given key words or headings which identify the first and last references on that page. These are for the purpose of enabling the reader to locate the more readily the references included within each page. The reader is also urged to read the rules which immediately follow on the next page.

RULES AND ABBREVIATIONS

I. Type.—Headings printed in bold-face capitals (e.g., FRANCE) represent article headings in the Encyclopædia Britannica; headings in light-face type, information in the text of articles, in an illustration or on a map. Immediately after the headings come the references, if any, to the atlas maps in volume 24, always enclosed in square brackets. The next reference is to the article heading if there is one. After that the references are to information contained in the text of the various articles; these references, if qualified by a descriptive word, are arranged alphabetically, or, if unqualified, in order of importance.

All references show (1) the volume in bold-face arabic numerals; (2) the page number in light-face type; (3) the exact quarter of the page by means of the letters, a, b, c, d, signifying respectively the upper and lower halves of the first and second columns (e.g., CANADA 4-600a). In atlas reference these letters are replaced by an indication of the map square in the usual form (e.g., B4).

A dash (—) denotes the repetition of the preceding heading, or of its first separate word. Hyphenated words are treated as single words. Headings in italic type denote books, poems, plays, reviews, essays, stories, newspapers, histories, etc.; operas, oratorios, cantatas, symphonic poems and similar works. Quotation marks are used for ships, pictures, songs, racehorses, statues, guns, airships, aeroplanes and orations.

II. Alphabetization.—All headings, whether consisting of a single word or of two or more, are treated for the purpose of alphabetization as single complete headings. Individuals of the same name and title are arranged in order of the importance of their titles; e.g., emperors precede kings, dukes precede earls, etc. A classifying word or phrase following the heading and in parentheses is not treated as part of the heading for alphabetical purposes except in a series of identical headings.

Where the same name denotes persons, places and things, the order is (1) persons, (2) places, (3) things.

Names beginning with "Mc" and "M'" are alphabetized as "Mac"; "St." is treated as "Saint"; "SS." as "Saints."

All numerals that might be expected to occur at the beginning of headings are spelled out; the same is true of Greek letters; e.g., α-ray as alpha ray.

III. Geographical Headings.—These, when situated in the British Isles, are followed by the county and the country, when in the United States by the State, when in Canada and Australia by the province and the country, and when elsewhere by the country only, unless two of the same name and character occur in the same country, when the province or department or similar subdivision is given to differentiate them. "U. S. S. R." is the abbreviation used for European Russia and "(Sib.) U. S. S. R." for Siberia. Topographical headings other than towns and villages are described as "riv.," "mt.," etc. In cases like "Big Mountain," "Big River," denoting physical features, the arrangement is Big, mt.

—, riv.

Such headings as "Big Mountain, Calif.," or "Mount Hope, Mass.," denote towns, not mountains.

IV. Abbreviations.—The following list includes the general contractions adopted for this Index. The contractions used in special branches of knowledge are included in the Index itself and in the article ABBREVIATIONS (vol. 1, p. 23).
